Course focus and approach: this is a course of History with a trans-disciplinary approach. The course focuses on the history of the Hispanic Jews approaching it from Jewish identities and culture and an analysis of Jewish sources and sources about the Jews. In this sense, this is not a course of religious studies or about Judaism per se, but an approximation to Jewish identity from the experiences of the Jews in Spain through centuries.

1

Course description:

The course proposes an itinerary through the rich cultural heritage of Hispanic Jews to present day along with interpretative elements to understand the recovery of that heritage and to manage it by analyzing the history of the Jewish people in the Hispanic lands and the interrelations, connections and influences between the Hispanic societies and Judaism, from the Middle Ages to present day. This is a course of history with a distinct interdisciplinary approach. A general contextual overview and an itinerary through the history of the Jews in Spain frame the discussions to follow. The aim is to delve around a series of selected themes to better understand the boundaries between Spanish Jews and Spanish gentiles from multiple perspectives and across time. Based on the in-class commentary and analysis of primary sources, film debates and case studies, specific topics will be examined: the perception of the self and the perception of the other; the shaping of a Jewish identity in the Hispanic lands versus the creation of the "Sephardic" cultural construct; the representations of Jews and Judaism; the role played by archetypes in the views on Judaism and Spanish anti-Semitism; and in Modern and contemporary times, the reconfiguration of Jewish identity from Modern Crypto-Judaism to the rising phenomenon of the Sephardic Benei Anusim.

Learning objectives:

- Provide the conceptual tools to analyze historical processes.
- Understand the history of Spanish Jewry and the singularity of the Spanish case.
- Recognize the Hispanic contribution to Jewish culture.
- Assess projects revolving around cultural heritage.

- Analyze the situation of minority cultures in multi-cultural contexts and their development.
- Interpret primary historical sources.
- Interpret audiovisual resources.
- Value the historic, archaeological and human heritage
- Respect the social values of equality and cultural diversity.

Course workload:

Students are expected to participate in lecture and faculty-led on-site visits and to do daily reads of the required bibliography which will be commented in class. Some sessions are based on active practical work with primary. Students will have to produce three short written assignments from three of the workshop sessions, a midterm exam and a final exam.

Teaching methodology:

The course is organized around several main topics which will be delivered in lecture classes - to provide the historical background- and practical sessions -devoted to the commentary of primary sources relevant to each given topic, film viewings with in-class debates or case study sessions. Some examples of these sources are: Canon laws and regulations, Royal decrees, Papal decrees, Inquisitorial procedures, Rabbinical Responsa and private correspondence, Halachic texts, Latin and Hebrew apologetic literature, Hebrew lyrical poetry, Spanish literature of the Golden Age, visual representations (from medieval paintings to comics) among others. All sources will be studied in their English translations.

The course includes field study tours to the Jewish Quarter and Museums or exhibitions, as well as the participation of relevant guest speakers.

Assessment criteria:

The course final grade will be distributed as it follows:

- Active class participation and commentary of the Read assignments: 20%
- Midterm exam: 25%
- Final exam: 25%
- 3 short written exercises based on the work with sources: 30%
