

PO/HS352g – GERMAN POLITICAL THOUGHT: AN INTRODUCTION

IES Abroad Berlin

DESCRIPTION:

This course is an introduction to German Political Thought from the eighteenth to the twenty-first century. A chronological survey of important thinkers and fundamental texts, it revolves around a theoretical reflection on a variety of core topics such as war and peace, bureaucracy and political leadership, extremism and totalitarianism, feminism and postcolonialism. Texts will include not only political treatises and sociological essays, but also literary texts with political relevance. The instructor will provide students with plenty of support for handling these texts. Placing thinkers and texts within their historical, social, and political contexts, the course invites students to grapple with social and political phenomena both past and present, and to adopt a comparative approach.

CREDITS: 3

CONTACT HOURS: 45

LANGUAGE OF INSTRUCTION: German

PREREQUISITES: None

ADDITIONAL COST: None

METHOD OF PRESENTATION:

- Lectures
- Group work and discussions
- Student presentations and reports on chosen topics
- Films and other visual materials
- Course related field study trips to relevant places of modern German history.
- Moodle will be used to enhance students' learning experiences.

REQUIRED WORK AND FORM OF ASSESSMENT:

- Participation-10%
- Midterm Exam-30%
- Panel Presentation-20%
- Final Project-40%

Participation

Course participation includes attendance, participation in class discussions, familiarity with the assigned texts and the topics covered in class. Students are expected to come prepared with personal notes on the readings. The grading rubric for participation is available in the IES Berlin Academics Manual on Moodle.

Midterm Exam

The midterm exam will cover the contents of course sessions 1-10. Students will be required to answer 3 questions in essay format. They will be given 180 minutes to work on the exam.

Panel Presentation

Every week, one to two students will be assigned as our "panelists" (or: experts). As a panelist, you will study the material especially thoroughly, answer the reading questions and suggest questions for in-class discussion. As a panelist, you can decide what angle to focus on when approaching the reading(s): for example, is the reading still relevant today? Or, what questions does the reading leave out entirely?

Final Project

The final project consists of the final paper (25%) and a creative final presentation of the findings (15%). The Final presentations will be held during our last session; they should be a brief (not more than five minutes), creative addition to your final paper. For instance, a video, a cartoon, a play--or something else entirely. The final paper (approx. 1,500 words) is due at the end of finals week (Thursday, 18:00) and is to be submitted via Moodle. The final paper can be based on the material reviewed for the panel presentation.

LEARNING OUTCOMES:

Upon completion of this course, student will be able to:

- identify the unique aspects of German political thought,
- critically assess the continuing relevance of German political thought,
- distinguish main political concepts relevant to German history (liberalism, socialism, communism, Nazism, totalitarianism, colonialism, feminism),
- draw the comparison between German political and social phenomena and phenomena prevalent in other countries and societies (such as the USA).

ATTENDANCE POLICY:

For our up-to-date attendance and exam policy, see: <https://moodle.iesabroad.org/mod/page/view.php?id=1004317>.

ACADEMIC INTEGRITY:

Students are expected to abide by the IES Abroad Academic Integrity Code.

CONTENT:

This class will provide students with selections from primary and secondary sources. Additionally, to the optional readings, the lecturer will suggest more material (videos, blog entries, etc.) during class and via Moodle. Students are encouraged to bring related material to class to spark fruitful discussions.

Sessions	Content	Readings
Week 1	Sessions 1 & 2: Introduction & Classical Theories I Introduction What is German Political Thought—and what are some of its key issues? What is a canon--and what are some of the issues of "canonization"? What topics have been left out of traditional German political thought, and why? Classical Theories I: Perpetual Peace--Idealism in International Relations What is peace and how can it be achieved and maintained? We will focus on Immanuel Kant's answers to these questions in a text that can be considered a very early example of "international relations". We will zoom in on Kant's idea of a "Federation of States" and his endorsement of cosmopolitanism. We will also consider the historical background to Kant's text, namely, the Enlightenment and the 1795 peace treaty between Prussia and France.	Reading (in class): Immanuel Kant [1795], "Zum ewigen Frieden. Ein philosophischer Entwurf", pp.104-122.
Week 2	Sessions 3 & 4: Classical Theories II: Realist Approaches in International Relations In this week's sessions, we will contrast Kant's "idealist" approach to politics and international relations with "realist" approaches that emphasize the reality of conflict and war.	Reading: Carl von Clausewitz [1832-34], Vom Kriege, Book 1, Chapter 1, "Was ist der Krieg?" pp.14-29.

	Amongst those, we will discuss Clausewitz's definition of war as a legitimate act of statecraft in the early 19 th century.	Optional: Carl von Clausewitz [1832-34], Vom Kriege , Book 1, Chapter 2, "Zweck und Mittel des Krieges", pp. 29-41. Panel Presentation
Week 3	Sessions 5 & 6: Marxism In today's sessions, we turn to Engels' and Marx' theories of history and revolution, and their critique of capitalism. We will grapple with their description of "historical materialism" and their depiction of capitalism as "alienation" and "exploitation". We will also discuss the historical, social and political background to the "Communist Manifesto" (1848) such as the Industrial Revolution and the German Revolution of 1848.	Reading: Friedrich Engels and Karl Marx [1848], Manifest der kommunistischen Partei , pp. 459-474. Panel Presentation
Week 4	Sessions 7 & 8: World War I and the Question of Meaning We will continue our discussion of war from Sessions 3 and 4 from yet another perspective: how can we make sense of war, especially of "total" or highly industrialized war? In this week, we will turn to two very different literary accounts of World War I, both revolving around the loss of the individual in a "total war" and the question of how to find meaning in a senseless world.	Reading: Ernst Jünger, In Stahlgewittern , Chapter 1, "In den Kreidegräben der Champagne", pp. 7- 18; Erich Maria Remarque, Im Westen nichts Neues , Chapter 1, pp. 1-16. Optional: Ernst Jünger, In Stahlgewittern , "Vom täglichen Stellungskampf", pp. 57-75 Erich Maria Remarque, Im Westen nichts Neues , Chapter 6, pp. 73-101. Panel Presentation
Week 5	Sessions 9 & 10: Socialist Feminism In today's class, we discuss the work of two of Germany's first feminists, Clara Zetkin and Rosa Luxemburg who also understood themselves as socialists. In particular, we will discuss how Zetkin and Luxemburg describe the link between socialism and feminism in their fight for equal opportunities and universal suffrage. Focusing on Zetkin and Luxemburg, we will trace the links between Germany's entry into World War I and the movements of pacifism and internationalism. Moreover, we will also see just how Luxemburg's assassination in 1919 shaped the so-called Weimar Republic.	Reading: Clara Zetkin, "Für die Befreiung der Frau! Rede auf dem Internationalen Arbeiterkongreß zu Paris (19. Juli 1889)" (ca. 3 pages) Rosa Luxemburg, "Frauenwahlrecht und Klassenkampf" (ca. 4 pages) Optional: Frigga Haug, „Sozialistischer Feminismus: Eine Verbindung im Streit“, pp.52- 58. Panel Presentation

	Field Trip: Luxemburg, Liebknecht, and the Revolution of 1919: A Walk Through Friedrichshain
Week 6	Mid-terms	exam (three mini essays, 180 mins)
Week 7	Sessions 11 & 12: Bureaucracy, Charisma and War: Political Leadership in the Modern World In today's sessions, we will discuss two thinkers who grapple with the question of political leadership in modernity: Max Weber and Carl Schmitt. Against the background of the Weimar Republic, Weber emphasizes the role of charisma in an age of rationalization and bureaucratization. Writing a decade later, Schmitt, on the other hand, argues for the necessity of war in order for "the political" to exist.	Reading: Max Weber, "Politik als Beruf", pp. 157-167; Carl Schmitt, Der Begriff des Politischen, pp. 11-20 Optional: Max Weber, "Politik als Beruf", pp. 167-177; Student Presentation
Week 8	Sessions 13 & 14: Totalitarianism In today's sessions, we turn to Hannah Arendt's Origins of Totalitarianism, her analysis of Nazism and Stalinism. For Arendt, the Nazi regime and the horrors it inflicted can only be understood if we decipher the "fictional world" that the Nazis created. Field Trip: The Rise of the Nazis (Topography of Terror or Walking Tour Kreuzberg)	Reading: Hannah Arendt, "Totale Organisation" H. Arendt, Elemente und Ursprünge totaler Herrschaft, pp. 766-786 Student Presentation
Week 9	Sessions 15 & 16: Art After Auschwitz. Adorno and Celan. "To write poetry after Auschwitz is barbaric", writes Theodor Adorno, one of the most important thinkers and critics of post-World War II Germany. How can we understand this dictum? How has art (and culture) become implicated in the horrors of the Holocaust according to Adorno? And what hope is there of a new kind of art, one that would help us "escape barbarism"? For Adorno, one of the answers lies with the poetry of Paul Celan who sought to reconfigure language for a post-Holocaust world.	Reading: Theodor W. Adorno, "Kulturkritik und Gesellschaft" (ca. 20 pages) Celan, "Todesfuge" and other poems from Mohn und Gedächtnis
Week 10	Sessions 17 & 18: Black German Feminism In today's sessions, we turn to the life and work of May Ayim (1960 to 1996), a German-Ghanaian poet, historian, and activist. Like other Afro-German women, Ayim was strongly influenced by the Black feminist Audre Lorde, who spent	Reading: Katharina Oguntoye, May Opitz, Dagmar Schultz (eds.) [1986], Farbe bekennen. Afro-deutsche Frauen auf den Spuren ihrer Geschichte (selections)

	extended periods of time in Berlin in the 1980s and early 90s and became instrumental for the birth of the Afro-German identity movement. Panel Discussion: Black Activism in Germany Today	May Ayim, [1996], blues in schwarz weiss (selections) Natasha Kelly, "Schwarze Frauen in Deutschland. Aus der Unsichtbarkeit getreten." Interview in TAZ, May 3, 2017. Ca. 6 pages. Film (in class): Audre Lorde. The Berlin Years 1984 to 1992. Optional Reading: Charly Wilder, "Lorde's Berlin", NYT July 19, 2019. Ca. 5 pages. Panel Presentation
Week 11	Sessions 19 & 20: What about the Future? Ecological Movements Then and Now This week's sessions approach the history of ecological movements from both a theoretical and a historical angle. First, we will become acquainted with Hans Jonas' Das Prinzip Verantwortung (1979). Asking questions such as "are we responsible for the future implications of our actions? Are we responsible for keeping our planet "livable"?", Jonas formulated a kind of environmental ethics that continues to be highly relevant today. We will substitute our discussion of Jonas with a historical retracing of Germany's ecological movements, from the nuclear disarmament movement and other ecological social movements in Germany in the 80s and the foundation of Germany's Green Party to today's Fridays for Future.	Reading: Hans Jonas, Das Prinzip Verantwortung, pp. 21-41 Frank Decker, "Etappen der Parteigeschichte der GRÜNEN" Anna Jeschke und Laura Cwiertina, "Extinction Rebellion und letzte Generation. Ihr Ziel bleibt Empörung." Optional Reading: Christa Wolf [1987], Störfall, pp. 9-23 Alexandra Endres, "Wenn die Welt so weitermacht, landen wir bei zwei bis vier Grad plus", Die Zeit, Feb 26, 2021, ca. 1 page Panel Presentation
Week 12	Sessions 21 & 22: Final Discussion & Wrap-Up. For our last session, we will wrap-up and review our discussions throughout the course, addressing the questions such as: what distinguishes German political thought? How is it linked up with German political history? And how have German thinkers and authors informed global and national debates outside of German? Session 23: Individual Paper Consultation (TBA)	Final Presentations
Week 13	FINALS	Final paper due Thursday (18:00)

FIELDTRIPS:

Week 5, Sessions 9 & 10: Revolutionary Berlin

This week's fieldtrip serves the purpose of introducing students to the 1919 revolution and the role played by Rosa Luxemburg. We will go on a guided tour through "revolutionary Friedrichshain".

Week 8, Sessions 13 & 14: Totalitarianism: The Topography of Terror

This fieldtrip will further deepen our understanding of the rise of the Nazis in the early 1930s.

Week 10, Sessions 17 & 18: Black Activism in Berlin Today.

In today's session, we will discuss the importance of Black activism in Berlin today. We will also speak about the rise of extremism in Germany.
